

Eugene Rhuggenaath
Prime Minister of Curaçao

Eugene Rhuggenaath was sworn in as Prime Minister of Curaçao on 29 May 2017. He has alternately worked in both the public and private sector. When not serving his country in various positions, lastly as Minister of Economic Development, he was building a career in the international financial sector, both in Curaçao and in Europe.

Prime Minister Rhuggenaath is an executive with proven experience in leading diverse teams of professionals to heightened levels of success. He has a keen ability in identifying synergies and building strategic alliances and developing collaborative networks and is capable of working in high demanding, dynamic environments in a global setting. He is result driven, has strong creative thinking skills and the avid skills to lead, motivate and inspire people.

His particular areas of interests are innovation, strategic and organizational development, international relations and commerce (global value chains), advancing corporate social responsibility, the advancement of wellbeing, and the unearthing and realization of human potential for the betterment of the global society.

Prime Minister Rhuggenaath studied Business Administration at the University of Miami and obtained his MBA/MBI at Rotterdam School of Management in the Netherlands. He is married and has three children.